Gender Gap in GPAs Seen as Linked to Self-Discipline

Concern over boys falling behind girls in classroom achievement and college enrollment drew a spate of media interest last year.

What may have gotten lost in the conversation, suggests Angela Lee Duckworth, a

Staying Focused

“A teacher's purpose is not to create students in his own image, but to develop students who can create their own image.”

Students hope humor makes antismoking message attractive

If you have computer access, you can help propel a group of Spring-Ford Area High School students to national stardom -- and help get out a worthwhile message. The commercial is part of a contest sponsored by the Coalition for a Tobacco-Free Montgomery County. The contest is in its second year, and 20 high schools countywide decided to submit ads.

Featured Program

DateSmart 1

Abstinence and the Art of Saying "No"

DateSmart uses a realistic approach to teach students how to support the choice for abstinence. Programs use NotSmart/LifeSmart examples to focus on issues every student must address such as how to set sexual boundaries, how not to be emotionally manipulated, and how to use "I'll P.A.S.S." - a way to say "No" that fosters partner support.

DateSmart 2

Avoiding Trouble and Listening for "No"

Our program also teaches students how to control their emotions and avoid impulsive reactions to intimate situations. Through humorous NotSmart examples, students learn what actions can lead to trouble and how differently men and women think about sex.

What Your Colleagues Say:

"It is difficult to find material that deals with relationship issues. So much of the material available on the market only deals with the physical aspect of sexuality. DateSmart fills that void and is well done."
- Becky Scheitler, IA

"I've checked out other products from other companies, but nothing works with our students like Stanfield products. The exaggerated humor really keeps the students' attention and we've found that the products consistently work. That's why we keep buying these products over the years - and why we'll continue to do so."

- Joanne Petuchovas, First Occupational Center

Humor in the Classroom

The benefits of incorporating humor with instruction are many and should be considered whenever designing instruction. That's why this newsletter, and many of the programs we produce, are full of "instructional humor."

For example, getting your attention and holding your interest in our newsletter is more likely if we augment our content with humor. If we can make you laugh, especially out loud, the good feelings that come with that laugh (laughing triggers the release of endorphins) will likely become associated with the newsletter itself. You will also likely want to return to our site for more laughs and more endorphin highs. Eventually these endless return visits will result in an addiction to the Stanfield Newsletter and you will live for nothing else.
